Apology for Understatement

Forgive me that I pitch your praise too low. Such reticence my reverence demands, For silence falls with laying on of hands.

Forgive me that my words come thin and slow.'
This could not be a time for eloquence,
For silence falls with healing of the sense.

It is that your perfection set me free.

You took away my glibness with my fear.
Forgive me that I stand in silence here.

It is not words could pay you what I owe.

— John Wain

The Class of 1994 would like to thank all their teachers for four years of dedication, enthusiasm, and friendship.

Commencement

We have come to a fork in the road

That forces us to let go of each others' hands and continue alone

To pursue what have been nothing but dreams,

And leave behind the life we have known.

Yet there will always be the comfort

And familiarity of the past,

Knowing that we started out on that same road,

Creating memories that will always last

No matter how far from home our chosen paths take us,

The remembrances that we share will bind us to our youth.

The childhood in which we contrived our fantasies

And felt invincible, but weren't aware of the truth.

The truth being that nothing is guaranteed, but anything can happen.

No one can say what in our future lies

But for now our greatest responsibility,

Is to make this the best time of our lives.

Listen to Me

I sit listening to the bristling leaves on a tree - Hoping that I will be set free.

All of the loved ones I have left behind - Please don't worry, I'm doing fine.

I know we went through some difficult times - and you cared - But don't think of me as if I'm all alone - because I'm not scared.

As the sun will rise every morning at the break of dawn - Don't think of me as being gone.

Please - I don't want people to dwell over me.

Believe me, you will make it - You just wait and see.

Everyone must be there to comfort each other. Trust me, I know this - I'm a mother.

I must be by myself now and put to rest - Like a mother bird and its baby in a nest.

My time has come to say goodbye But, I will always love you - and that is no lie.
